

Small to Medium-Sized Businesses And Their Financial Statements

Current Trends in the Marketplace

- Independent research shows that almost half of small businesses (45%) employ neither an accountant nor a bookkeeper. Their business financials at year-end consist of bank or credit card transactions*.
- One-quarter of small businesses (25%) still track their finances on paper instead of electronically.
- Over a half of small businesses (53%) use an accounting software solution, such as QuickBooks (online and desktop, 74%), Microsoft Dynamics GP (6%), or Xero (4%).

Automation (or Not?)

- None of the software solutions listed above are able to take bank or credit card transactions and transform them into financial statements.
- All of these software solutions require time-consuming, manual assignment of bank transactions to proper accounting categories or require human beings to “train” the machines to recognize patterns in future bank transactions. Case in point – QuickBooks online, the most popular software solution on the market.

Shoebox of Receipts

- Our internal surveys indicate that accountants who take on new clients are poorly equipped to handle this issue.
- Most bookkeepers and accountants rely on Microsoft Excel's vlookup formulas and manual sorting and filtering of clients' data to prepare their financial statements from back years, a time-consuming and error-prone process.
- Three in five accountants we've surveyed stated that they refused to do financial statement preparations for prior periods of their new clients and only choose to do the books on a prospective basis.

Solution

Glasgow Knight Financial offers financial statement preparation and compilation service to businesses and accounting and tax professionals whereby:

- We take clients' bank and credit card transactions and transform them into properly prepared sets of financial statements without any other prior accounting work done by our clients.
- For clients with inventory, property, plant, and equipment, loan balances, and those who require accruals at period-end, we assist with ensuring that their balance sheet amounts are properly reflected at period-end.

We take input provided by the clients, consisting of the following:

and with the help of state-of-the-art technology, computer robotics, machine learning, the power of the internet, and highly-skilled financial professionals sort and organize them to prepare financial statements, that look like this:
